Wise Words for Moms Ginger Plowman

Do you find yourself threatening, repeating your instructions, or raising your voice in an attempt to get your children to obey? Are you discouraged because it seems you just can't reach the heart of your child? Through personal experience and the practical application of Scripture, Ginger Hubbard encourages and equips moms to reach past the outward behavior of their children and dive deeply into the issues of the heart. Ginger's candid approach will help moms move beyond the frustrations of not knowing how to handle issues of disobedience and into a confident, well-balanced approach to raising their children.

Karen says

This is a short read but very good. I read it several times through out the year as a reminder for myself.

Crissy Bontrager says

This is a great resource for moms who want to bring biblical principals into their parenting.

Becky Saylor says

This booklet is a great guide to use when confronted with a child's misbehavior. "Heart probing" questions, such as "Are you promoting peace or stirring up trouble?," are paired with words of reproof (God does not like one who stirs up trouble) and words of encouragement (God gives joy to those who promote peace) that are always tied to Bible verses. The specificity of each behavior – from bragging to worry – and the explicit connections to God's word are a great way to handle the communication of discipline.

Melissa says

Great quick reference guide for using Scripture to rebuke, correct and train children. Not an exhaustive list of Scriptures one could use, but an excellent way to find something quickly. Love it!
