Divided Frank Tayell

It is a week since the outbreak began in New York. The president has been betrayed. The vice-president is dead. The government has collapsed. The conspirators are close to victory.

Having narrowly escaped agents of the cabal, Tom Clemens heads to Washington hoping to get word of the conspiracy to the president. The highways become impassable, filled with millions fleeing from the cities. Towns are fortified, but it is too late. The infection has already spread throughout the country. Nowhere is safe from the undead.

As refugees storm the towns, and zombies fill their smoking ruins, survivors become more deadly a threat than the impossibly living dead. Still hopeful he can find the cause of the outbreak, and so end it, Tom fights his way through an undead America. As he searches for the cabal, he is unaware that they are searching for him.

The story of Tom Clemens / Sholto continues in Surviving The Evacuation: Book 1: London. That of the survivors in North America will continue in Here We Stand 3: Betrayed.

Please note: As the President of the United States is a background character, and the presidential election a background event, American English has been used in this book though with some British spellings as most of Surviving the Evacuation takes place in the United Kingdom.

Tayell's series comes full circle here... With the story behind Bill's brother Tom being told, right up until he heads for Britain. Not my favourite, possibly because I found the government conspiracy a little dull In comparison to the day to day living with the undead that filled the other books. Still a good read though and I eagerly await the next instalment of the U.K based characters

Zombies everywhere.

Just finished another great read, 12 books in 12 weeks, now book 11 and after that back to the start. Happy days...

4.5 stars

I was really looking forward to this as soon as I'd read book one, so leapt on this when it came out. I read it in one day, it's really good!

The first half of the book tells of Tom and Helena's struggles through the newly zombie infected landscape of Pennsylvania and surrounding states, and they meet up with some other travellers, all of them heading to Maine, where Tom's hideaway cottage by the sea is situated. But then the dastardly Powell catches up with him..... added to the zombies, Tom also has to battle against his deadly enemies, and then the after effects of a nuclear attack. I won't say anymore because it'll give the plot away, but it's pretty gripping, and I couldn't put it down!

I wasn't so interested in the conspiracy underlying Powell and co's plan to grab power, perhaps because it became irrelevant once America was on its knees, but there were hints that all is not over on that front, and I expect all to be explained later in the STE series set in England, of which I have only read four books. This is more than just a fighting-the-zombies-blood-and-gore type of book, as Tom has other quests of his own. At his most desperate and lonely, the atmosphere and his feelings about the end of the world and life itself are so well written.

This series is always unpredictable and never boring, well thought out, and I recommend it highly if you're into the post apocalypse genre.

Better than the one before, but still containing the kind of exposition and other moments that you typically find in American mini-series, IYSWIM - though perhaps that's fitting for a diversion like this. Nevertheless, eminently readable and I've just torn through it in one sitting, so...three stars, all told.

Brilliant!

Totally loved this one. I really enjoyed Helena as a character and was genuinely sad when she was killed. Tom/Sholto is really believable despite the unbelievable storyline.

Gary Letham says

The second book of the Here We Stand sub series takes Sholto and Helena finally to Maine via Pennsylvania and New York State capture by the cabal and nuclear attack. Another superb book in the series exploring the American back story, at the same time Bill Wrights and Nilda's stories commence across the Atlantic. Looking forward to the next installment to find out what happens in Maine when Sholto goes to Britain

Loved it

I've been reading this series for the last few weeks, find it really hard to put them down! This is the second part of Sholto/Toms story which ties in with Bills story.

Doctor Doom says

I have read many of the books in this series [about 7 I think so far] and they have all been very good- no losers in my opinion but some have been excellent. This is one of those. Love Sholto.

Robd says

The second volume of 'Here we stand' and subtitled 'Divided', is a continuation of Frank Tayell's post apocalyptic series set in a world devastated by a zombie plague and nuclear bombs. As the protagonist Tom makes his way across wasteland America, sometimes accompanied, sometimes alone, he is pursued by those responsible for the catastrophe. Trying to get to his cottage in a remote coastal village, Tom is abducted by his pursuers because of his knowledge of their plans for world power that went so horribly wrong.

Another great instalment in the 'Surviving the Evacuation' series and one that acts as a backstory to the main series but also carries on the story started in book one of this complimentary spin off.

Lots of blood and gore as the battle to survive continues and as Tom encounters other survivors; some more friendly than others. Once again, I am left wanting more and I am sure that there will be; there being so many possibilities and situations that humanity would have to face.
