In a small town, everyone knows everything about everybody. Or do they? For twenty years, Kate Doyle has been haunted by the night when she was forced to flee from her tiny Virginia home town and abandon her childhood sweetheart, Reed Fitzgerald. So when Kate, now in her mid-30s, escapes her unhappy life in Washington, DC and takes a much-needed vacation, the last thing she expects is to be reunited with Reed. Now, under the warm clear Caribbean sun, amid ancient churches and pink flamingos, Kate and Reed seek to revive the love that they thought was gone forever. But will small-town secrets ruin their last chance for happiness? Woven into the modern tale of Kate and Reed are the tales of those who came before them. Their mothers: teenagers in the chaotic 1960s, best friends who are in love with the same man - although only one of them knows it. Reed's grandmother: already a bitter old woman by the 1930s, she would do anything to carry on the family name and would drive away anyone who came between her and her grandson. And even the founder of the town: in 1865, what guilty secret drove one man to bring his two daughters across the ocean from Ireland and settle in the dark Virginia hills? At its heart, Homesong is the story of a small town: its lies and truths, its beginnings and endings. It's about proud secrets, unrestrained joy, and the old adage that you may leave your home, but it never really leaves you.

Martha says

Homesong weaves together the stories of three generations of two families in a small town in rural Virginia. The focus is on the relationship between Kate and Reed, now and in their childhood and teen years, but their history is strongly affected by the relationships of their parents and grandparents. Each generation has made its own mistakes and has its own secrets, and those mistakes and secrets have affected both families in one way or another.

Misha Crews has a way of writing that draws the reader into the lives of her characters. She makes you care about them and want to know how everything will turn out for them. I look forward to reading more of her writing.

Won on First Reads on Dec. 31.

Very intricately woven story. Thoroughly enjoyable. All around great writing.

Gail Sobin says

I read this book back some time toward the end of 2013. Going back to it now, it took some time to remember what the story was about. Once I remembered it, I remember that I liked it a lot. However, I am giving it one less star, as I guess it was not as memorable as I had thought.

Lonny says

Started out with some promise and quickly went downhill.

Becky Pierce says

Great story

Cynthia says

I thoroughly enjoyed this light romance. This is a story of two childhood sweetheart who were separated by circumstances and then came together accidentally when they met on a cruise ship. Of course there is no such thing as coincidences so then meeting between Kate and the now wealthy Reed was actually engineered. This is a story of misunderstanding, jealousy, star-crossed lovers, and a little bit of mystery. But sometimes a little romance is just what you need.

Stephanie Bolen says

Liked it alot, I love stories about the guy pining for the one that got away.

Karen says

Homesong is a love story with secrets and mysteries that span over several generations. Misha Crews has created some wonderful characters in this can't-put-down tale set in Virginia. I'm sure others will fall in love with her characters the way I did!

Janice says

Homesong

It was good but a little hard to follow at times. I was a little lost when the story switched to the ancestors.

Mary Ellen Eye Lounsbery says

I had a little trouble sticking with this one but if you hang in there you will end up being glad you did.

Cindy says

I loved the way the author weaved three generations of the families together. Some times when you have flashbacks it's easy to get lost this book wasn't like that.
