honestly, it was really basic stuff that I've heard a ton of times. Absolutely nothing new in this. All true and good counsel.

Just doesn't hit me like, whoa! Now THAT I can change! It was like, "yeah yeah, of course I shouldn't cheat on my spouse... of course I should do things he like to do..."

I don't usually pick up marriage books but for some reason this caught my eye. Written by a "sweet old man" who treats his wife like the queen she is and shares some great wisdom for both husbands and wives on how to treat one another for a lasting relationship. so sweet!

Zig has some good advice, but the book is very dated. I was surprised it was published in 1990; it reads more like it was written in the 50s or 60s. Very heteronormative, very traditional views about marriage (for one MAN and one WOMAN), and with antiquated gender roles. This guy is so conservative that he is NEVER alone with one woman, ever. He doesn't believe in true friendships between men and women. And there was way too much "get in the kitchen"-type stuff. And his advice is like, "This will definitely work! Just do these simple things!" Doesn't really acknowledge that there are no quick fixes.

His best section was the advice on how to be a better listener, and the quizzes yielded interesting conversations, but really, I only found about 10-20 pages of this relevant/useful/applicable.

I listened to this a few years ago and decided to listen to it again. The audio version is more like a long lecture by Zig Ziglar than a book, but he presents in a way that is humorous and challenging. Some may suggest that his views are antiquated, but I find myself agreeing with most of what he has to say and it was a reminder to me of the things I need to keep in front of me as most important. That is, helping my wife to see how unique, special and loved she is.

Had some great points, but a little slow to get through.

Terry Mullican says

In normal Ziglar fashion, Zig shares his heart for people (The Redhead) and talks about real marriages, real problems and what it takes to create a loving caring marriage.
