New Orleans Cat Johnson

When I agreed to be my best friend's maid of honor, I thought it would be fun. Maybe I'd even meet a nice, single guy at the reception. But now the bride is missing, I have the hang over from hell and it seems I may have accidentally had sex with the groom last night while pretending to be a stripper to spy on him at his bachelor party... Or maybe I didn't.

It's hard to tell since I can't remember much past drinking that last Hurricane on Bourbon Street. There's also this matter of the groom's identical twin brother and the fact they have a habit of switching places.

I do know one thing, nothing is what it seems in New Orleans. Anything can happen...and it usually does.

This book was featured on a blog that I read, and the excerpt hooked me. So I immediately went out and bought it, and read it when I should have been trying to sleep. It was a quick, enjoyable read; the premise was a bit over the top, and the characters weren't given a ton of time to be fleshed out, but overall I liked it.

This was really cute! We start off the story with Rose waking up to the monster of all hangovers, and not really being able to piece the night before together. She remembers her friends talked her into going to her best friend's fiancée's bachelor party to be the stripper they ordered. To try to see if the fiancée was an asshole. The morning after, what she thinks is the fiancée comes into the room, sits down on her bed, and kisses her. WTF? What has she done?!

Then we learn about the day before, how this stripper idea was hatched, what happened at the bachelor party. Then we learn about the day after.

It was a sweet, sexy story, and it was very enjoyable. On the short side, but still fun.

New Orleans is a fun quick read from Cat Johnson!! I LOVED it!! As a Louisiana girl I know that what the fudge happened last night feeling that you often times wake up to after a night of partying in New Orleans.

Rose hopes to be a great maid of honor to her best friend, Beth, but the night of the bachelorette party may just ruin her chance. Rose wakes up the next morning with no memory of how she got back to the hotel room, and then is shocked to see the groom come in the room and kiss her on the lips right before she gets sick all over the place. The last memory she has is of Beth sending her in undercover as a stripper into the bachelor party. What the heck happened between her getting there and her waking up? And will there still be a wedding?

I honestly don't want to give too much away about this wonderful quick read! This is another one of those lunch break books, and I think y'all will love this one. Cat once again created a story that will keep you hostage till the end.

Rose wakes up and can't remember what happened last night. She knows she's in New Orleans to be maid of honor to her best friend Beth, but between her blotchy memory and her friends she recalls a bit but then nothing....Tim is here to preform his brotherly/best man duties which happen to involve a little twin magic...Very short and quick read that starts with hangovers and strippers and ends with a black eye and icing...onto the next Stripping for the cause!

Laugh out loud antics of the bride's insecurity when she finds out a stripper is going to be at the bachelor party. What's a bride to do, but ask her matron of honor to be the stripper. A twin, too many hurricanes and one jerk slipping a drug in her drink make for one interesting strip tease. HILARIOUS!!!!
