Earth is a fiery pile of rubble. Amy, a woman left to fend for herself on the volatile planet, seeks to feed a pitiful group of women and children, misfits left to perish because of various and devious reasons. Amy was diagnosed with cancer the year her world fell apart and not given a shuttle pass to the new planet, Ulsy. That she is still alive is all but a mystery to her. When strange beings land on Earth's surface, Amy presumes the armored, hideous creatures are looming death. Dasks is a full-blooded Castian warrior from Dargon. He and his warrior mate have come to Earth seeking human females to bond with. A male of almost four hundred years old, he can't believe how captivating his new human female, Amy, is. But Dasks' race can sense deception and lies—he can smell fear. Amy is keeping a secret from him. When a Castian mates, he mates for life. If Amy dies, so will Dasks. Dasks must decide if he can live without her—because if they mate he will surely die with her.

Conceived?

Yes, conceived.

Eye roll... she was wrapped in the armor of his love (gag)...

She must be a princess because all of the sudden a big strong man comes into her life and all of her problems (including cancer!) are solved. I liked her better as a courageous starving survivor.

So.... I do not know what to feel about this book. Amy is okay and Dasks is okay as well. Amy annoyed me to no end. I understand why she felt the way she did however I just needed her to be honest in the beginning and just accepted the fact that her and Dasks were mates. I think a lot of the back and forth would have ended if it was not for her. I did not hare the book bu there is just something about it that was completely and utterly aggravating about.

I'm loving this New World series. Great follow-up to Shield.

Those Castians are some pretty sexy virgins. They can envelop me in their armor any time...

Ok so here is the thing, the editing in these books drives me nuts, even to the point I end up going back a few pages to see if I missed anything so I can see you saying 4 stars? WTF? The bottom line is the characters are great, the story keeps me well distracted and I need to know what happens next so I just keep reading them whenever a break is needed from angst and heartbreak.

So really I can only complain about the editing in the fact that it drags me out of the story but it isn't enough to ruin it.

A very fast paced angst sci fi romance.

I still think it should be a longer book. There is so much going on. The beginnings start out great written like it's going to be a longer novel. With lots of detail and character build up. Somewhere in the middle it turns into a draft. Very fast paced and somewhat glossing over the story. A good editor should be able to help flesh out the rest of the story properly.

Having said that, it's a very imaginative and creative spin on alien romance. I would really like for the author to work on her craft because this series could be stellar if the writing was helped along a bit.

I'm on to book 3. I am very eager to see more of this world and author.

Am really pleased that the author chose to move the story on like this, though I'm a little surprised that Cobra got paired up in this one and so likely won't get his own book. In this installment a group of females from a dying earth are rescued by the arriving Castians, along with some animals. We get to see more of the insidious Tonans, their natures and culture still shrouded in a little mystery, though hopefully not for long - along with the mention of a potential traitor in the Castian midst. It did get sorta predictable, with it fairly easy to guess that the female leads cancer would end up cured if they mated.

Short and sweet how I can best describe this novella series so far, will read on and see if the trend continues.

It is not amusing to see that the Earth is being destroyed by earthquakes, tsunamis and meteorites. What is amusing is that the women who are kidnapped or lost on "Ulsy" the new planet that shuttles are taking women to are being fought over by 400 year old virgin armored men who have no clue what women are as they've never seen one. Of course as their scent triggers their ancient memories and with a little prompting from the women who are happy to escape death on Earth you get a HEA out of an alien abduction book.

Good points - they are totally in tune with their emotions and want to protect them. Amy was dying of breast cancer and when she and 7 other women and 3 children who were previously overlooked by the shuttle pilots are "rescued" by the aliens a new adventure begins for them all.

Good story but...

Reading the book second time made me maybe pay attention more to the characters and their development/ story.

Amy was surviving with other women, sick - cancer- when Dask found her.

Dask wanted to mate her but she kept him at arms length all the time due to her sickness.

What I didn't like the most about the story was Cobra's involvement and insistence to impregnate Amy even though he was mated.

Here is the moment when CL Scholey killed the story for me and my admiration to Cobra.

Castians mate for life and they do not cheat so impregnating would be in my books cheating. A contradiction who was not well handled and justified in the book. I don't mind to read about a cheating character but when mating is an absolute and for life that plot line just didn't make sense to me.

A good story none the less with an exciting world and sweet characters.

This is the second book in the New World series. Now that Castians are aware that human woman are compatible and in need of protection, they are going back to earth to find any women left behind.

Amy was left on earth, despite her being young and of child bearing age because she was considered tainted goods. She is dying of breast cancer, therefore she was left behind to fend for herself. She lives in a cave with a few other women and children, and the fight to find food has become more difficult by the day.

Dasks finds Amy and immediately knows she is his. But as Amy learns about what it means to be a mate, she realizes she cannot in good conscience mate with Dasks because it would be a death sentence for him.

I really loved how this book ended. (view spoiler)
