Funerals are for the living. Dallas finds no closure at Marlin's new age service, however, where none of Marlin's friends can figure out what caused him to drown himself. He was happy and well-liked, and led a rich and active life. Was the pressure of the turbulence too much for him? Of all the flight crew, he'd been the least distressed about the uncanniness of Flight 511. Since Marlin treated the turbulence as an adventure, his suicide makes no sense at all.

The distraction is welcome when Paul is called to DC to deal with his angry condo association, and Dallas comes along for the ride. The overnight stop turns ugly as Paul tries to determine whether he fits into his old life anymore—and how to put an end to the turbulence for the chance at a life worth living.

2.5 stars. I like the mystery unraveling but the woman in the car and the thing with Denny seemed very out of place.

Closer!

Radio Silence is book 7 of the Turbulence series.

This series is so exciting and I'm so glad I came across this gem. The crew of Flight 511 continues on its turbulent treks to Bermuda.

Paul is at Dallas's side as emotions run thick. The quest for finding the black box continues. We are close to getting answers and I have a theory as to what the next and last book brings us. I hope I'm right! 5 stars!

2.5

It starts with a service for Marlin organized by Rev. Ralph and his Unity church. Dallas could see a side of Marlin he never talked about. He realizes that he knows some people there.

So, we have that service, then a short trip to DC to deal with a homophobic neighbour and a jealous racist (Paul's 'friend'). Those two unconnected issues made me really angry.

Paul is still after his research and they end up in Marlin's house again. This time Paul finds the last thing Marlin made.

This instalment doesn't have a lot of Dallas and Paul time together. While there is an added creepiness to everything that is happening around them (weird old ladies and all that), there is this feeling of detachment that isn't quite comfortable.

I have a feeling that I will not like the last part very much.

The conflict with an over-jealous HOA was a bit anti-climactic. But, seriously, still no effing clue what the hell is causing the Turbulence divergence.

Have to move on. Have to find the answers!
These books are addictive.

Now we have sexual discrimination. Annoying and surprising to have it happen in DC, but it's possible. The church for Marlin is very new-age like. Maybe even Jungian. Then again, it has been years since I studied the different philosophies. I may be getting them all mixed up. All I'm getting out of this is Twinkle Twinkle little star is a theme.

If they continue to go on these Bermuda trips, maybe there's a way to just enjoy the time time together w/o any ramifications in the "empty" world. It could be fun.

We're finally drawing closer to the end. Paul and Dallas seem destined for an HEA. Can't wait to see what happens next.

Mixing New age philosophy with religion and sci-fi. Interesting. Liked seeing a peek at Paul's life pre-Turbulence.

Dallas and Paul are continuing on in their attempt to figure out the Bermuda phenomenon.

I think this is the most at ease that either of them have been, especially in relation to each other, despite Marlin's death and all of the other complications and challenges. I like it.

Dallas spent the entire flight drawing lazy circles on the back of Paul's hand with his forefinger.

It's interesting... my interest while reading this episode was more about Dallas and Paul, not necessarily the mystery. They are the focus in this one, and there's more and more honesty, and a quickness to lend support, knowing it'll be both accepted and wanted.

I really like the way this one was written.

On to the next!

Claudia says

Oh, so many dots connecting here! And Dallas and Paul's relationship is evolving, slowly but surely.

Marlin's funeral shows a side of him that Paul hadn't imagined: a man who cared about his peers, who was kind and generous with his time and money.

And he discovered the 'black box', which, of course, wasn't black nor a box :P But he doesn't feel like he has done any advancement in his investigation.

I'm going to go right up to the next book now.

I love the instalment approach to this story and I'm delighted to find the suspense has suddenly started to bite :). There's still enough in every book of the series to like in its own right - I love the way Dallas and Paul are interacting by now, and there's more of Marlin's puzzle and the Triangle phenomenon. No spoilers! LOL

Sofia says

What are you up to Paul?

I've come to care so much for them that I find myself wanting to hold Paul and tell him "Stand fast don't be discouraged."

Rhayne says

Just one left after this and I'm still loving them, every one of them, this series has been funny, wacky, strange and intriguing and I'm so glad I gave them a try!
