From Reader Review Bitch Planet #5 for online ebook

Shreya says

I'm going to use this last review as a review of the whole collection, so issues #1-5. Overall, I found myself liking the prisoners and rooting for them. I sympathize with them and connect to them easily because even though the world is futuristic, everything discussed is so clearly visible in our world today. The only thing I didn't really like was the writing and art style. It was all a bit incoherent sometimes, and some pages switched styles completely, jarring me a few times. Bitch Planet is absolutely a must-read for anyone looking to see women fighting back against an oppressive system (and maybe winning in future issues).

I don't really know what to say that I haven't already said when gushing about this series. It's incredible, and everyone (of an appropriate age) should read it. And don't even get me started on the essays and letters in the back. Just... Read it.

Leah says

Well the issue attempted to warn me, but I went in hoping beyond hopes that it was just a click baity title.

Got to more of the plot during this issue and saw more of the grimness that is Bitch Planet. This issue pretty much solidified where I believe the story will end up going and everything in each panel felt so very necessary, but that doesn't mean it didn't break my heart.

Ithlilian says

Another great installment. I especially liked the beginning that was dripping with sarcasm. Maybe more like oozing. Oozing sarcasm and social commentary. Still one of my favorite comics out there.

I really love this comic, but I sure wish that they were on a more consistent production schedule. I know they have their reasons, but it kind of sucked to have so many months between issue 4 and issue 5 (which concluded the arc)--I couldn't remember the details the way I wished I could.

Anyway, this arc was really solid and it's deserving of the accolades it gets.

Issue #5 continues the high quality storytelling and art of Bitch Planet that I have come to love and expect. I'm also enjoying the community responses at the back and the essays for the comic.

Like many readers, I was sad about the ending of the issue, but I'm still looking forward to the next issue. Hopefully the issues will be published more consistently in the future.

Initial thoughts review: NOOOOOO! I knew something of the sort was coming, we were all warned, but it was still so sad! I couldn't help but wonder "um, wasn't that character kind of crucial to the success of the plan?" But, I have one more issue to read before I'm all caught up and I know several more are planned so I have hope. As usual, I really enjoyed the essay. And YAY! More content!!!

What can I say to convince you to read this comic book series? Do you consider yourself a feminist? You must read it. Are you a female, but don't consider yourself a feminist? You must read it. Are you a male? You must read it. Are you a father/husband/boyfriend? You must read it. If you have any desire at all to understand what women today as well as women of the older generations went through, still go through, are going through, you must read it. Are you a human being? You must read it. Especially the essays. I know that there are many people out there who have trouble reading or understanding this form of artistic narrative, you still need to, at the very least, read the essays. Period.

Carrie says

There's a certain joy in my heart going to my comic book store and picking up a pull list the week Bitch Planet arrives because 1) I love this comic, 2) I've come to embrace the fanbase and have found new connections with several female fans (#SayYesToSisterHood), and lastly 3) this book makes me angry.

Yes, angry. You read that right. And sad. And lost. And leaves me in awe... and everything in between. This comic has a narrative that makes me feel certain ways all the way from Monday to Sunday and the week after that. Jumping right into issue number five, we see our crew with their team assembled ready and eager to go out kick some asses, take some names and wreck some serious ish up.

HOW DARE YOU?!
HOW FUCKING DARE YOU?!

Penny is still my #1! And I hope she gets revenge!

The men make me cringe and the women give me life!

NON COMPLIANCE NOW UNTIL FOREVER!
