The Mora M.R. Graham

Jadwiga D?browska is a mora, a creature whose spirit feeds on the dreams of others. Strange though her life has always been, Jadwiga could never have expected to wake from her own murder in a bizarre mirror world, chained body and soul to a terrifyingly powerful being that calls itself Twarz Cienia, the Shadow's Face. Now, with no choice but to obey the Twarz, she must contend with forces outside her understanding, fighting in a war that will never end.

And still she can't be sure that her freedom was a fair price for her life.

Kim Reed has spent six years searching for a lost friend, but her search is interrupted by the threat of war. The Votadini, an ancient Circle of Scottish wizards, are making yet another bid for dominance, and this time, they may be backed by black magic. With her own magic weak and atrophied, Kim isn't sure how useful she would be in a fight, and her years of research on the undead have made her an object of suspicion wherever she goes. She is not ready for wizard politics, for war, or for dealing with spies that can manipulate her dreams.

All she wants is her friend back, but there are Shadows standing in her way.

I was very happy to have this one to read right after I finished the Medium, the first book in this series. M.R. excellently continues the web she wove in the first book. She continues with a really good story, one I haven't come across yet and this time covers more of the wizards aspect of the series. She also introduces a Mora, a paranormal entity I have never heard about and made a great addition to the story.

Kim really comes into her own in this book and shows to be the heroine she really is. She is strong, yet trusting, determined and caring, a very complex individual that thankfully all makes sense. She seems the driving force and even though this book is about the Mora, it does cover more about Kim than the Medium did. I was also happy to read more about Lenny in this book, with just some glimmers of hope for him.

The Mora, oh boy, where to start. Just like Lenny, this is someone, you can't help but ache for. She seems to really have gotten the short end of the stick and really suffers with seemingly no way out. The ending leaves you where you were left with Lenny in the first book.

Daniel also gets a lot of time in this book and I wonder what he is about. So far the author has not released a lot of his mysteries and I am curious to see where she will take this one. I will definitely keep an eye out for future books since I really enjoyed the series so far.

I have received this book from the author for an honest review.

My favourite vampire, Daniel, has returned, along with my favourite wizard, Kim Reed. MR Graham is a true story teller - her characters are deep and dark, sometimes with a hint of tragic and her plots are darker and laced with the macabre. But there is a human-ness to these paranormal souls - one can't help but feel for some of them and absolutely abhor others. I was sucked into the story (once again) following Kim on her quest to find Lennie, while dealing with the issues of her overbearing family and Daniel, who is looking for asylum and hoping that Kim will help him. We're introduced to Jadwiga, the Mora, who is in the center of the story, a puppet in a war for power and powerless to do anything but obey the voice in her head. This is one series that I hope will not end, at least any time soon.

Well, that went down real smooth. Even better than the first one. :D
